Volleyball

Volleyball is a complex game of simple skills. It was formed using methods of play from handball and tennis.

Played with the fore arms and six players in each team on the both sides of the court.

The ball is spiked from up to 60 cm above the height of a basketball hoop (about 3.65 meters) and takes fractions of a second to travel from the spikier to the receiver.

That means the receiver must assess incoming angle, decide where to pass the ball and then control their pass in the blink of an eye.

Volleyball is a game of constant motion. The ball is served into play.

The team served to can touch the ball trice in turn and return to the other team. The usual pattern is a dig (an underarm pass made with the forearms) a set (an overhead pass made with the hands) and a spike (the overhead attacking shot).

Teams can also try to block the opponent's spike as it crosses the net.
